

- what do I want to learn or understand better?
- how can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?
- what is my contribution towards the team's application of scrum?
- what is my contribution towards the team's deliveries? That means that for the personal learning objective you will each week write down what you have achieved in relation to last week's ambition (technologies, concepts and skills learnt as well as how this was achieved), what you would like to achieve for the next week and how to make the change happen. The first week of the course you describe the current situation by motivating a learning objective. It is perfectly fine to change objective/s each week as long as you can motivate the change and you evaluate the outcome of the previous week (e.g. describing the current situation).

Reflection Week 4

This week I managed to create a hello world page, and it feels like our work is starting soon for real. Although I had to reduce this weeks scope because of the fact that our git setup isn't that good yet.

We have worked pretty separately, but when someone needs help I like to try help. I've started with some basic react tutorials so I start to feel like the uncertainty is going down.

My contribution this week has been nothing big in particular, I really like to try to help out whenever I can, but it seems like.

For next week we will try to get git going the whole group.
